

IGIANT TRANSPORTATION ROUNDTABLE
HOSTED BY J & B MEDICAL
DETROIT, MICHIGAN
OCTOBER 2015

Alan Ross, President of IFL Aviation made a passionate plea for more women pilots. We are about 15,000 pilots short today. A pilot can make a six figure annual income. Mr. Ross concluded by saying that women are much better pilots than men because how women can process information from the entire dashboard and always willing to ask for assistance unlike men who do not like to ask for any help.

Amelia Quelas discussed women's participation in the auto industry.

Michael Wiemann, M.D. discussed the need for better awareness and education for all being trained as medical professionals

Ivana Vettrano, M.D. and Renay Gagleard, R.N. discussed the need for improved product design for medical diagnostic tests as men and women are biologically distinct and how using telemedicine to do virtual maternal fetal medicine consults has dramatically improved care for pregnant women in remote, rural areas.

Alex Rossides commented on the lack of awareness in this important area and the need and value of these iGiant Roundtables. He represents many of the top philanthropic funders in the world and was going to talk to them about participating in education programs on this very important topic.

Sandi Williams and Louk Schulten discussed some of the ways they incorporate feedback into better foot-wear design.

Mary Naber discussed how transporting seniors in their PACE program can be challenging because of the design of the vans.

Saralyn Mark, M.D. concluded the meeting by noting the opportunities for more iGiant Roundtables engendered from our meeting.

Michael Wiemann, M.D., President of St. John's Providence Novi and Southfield, said his willing to data mine injuries on accidents between men and women.
